THE GREAT CROTON PIPE. As the new main over the High Bridge is one of the most interesting and important public works now in progress, and presents itself and in its manufacture many features of novelty, we have taken some pains to gath-Hornee Abbott & Son's Canton Rolling Mills, Baltimore; a firm which has made the widest iron in the world, sheets 110 inches plactured by them. The pigs of iron weigh about 100 pounds each. Several pigs having been broken up into three or four pieces each, as many as required are thrown into the puddling furnaces, with an allowance of 50 per cent, for loss of weight in manufacture .-The mass soon becomes of the consistency of dough, when it is stirred up with slice bars, or puddling irons, very much as a woman would stir up the material for a loaf of bread. After the lapse of about an hour it is worked op into what is called a puddle-ball, in this by aid of tongs and a crane is placed beneath harge Nesmith hammer, and after a tremenducus pounding, it comes out in the form of a slab 24 feet long by 18 inches wide and 6 meles thick. After being allowed to gradually end off, this slab is put into a reheating turnace, where it remains a few minutes, and is then taken out and rolled to the required thickness, and the ragged edges trimmed off by means of large shears. The sheets would not graze his hat in passing through it. It will be made into sections of 12 feet.

There will be 112 of these sections, requirsquare feet, and weighs 960 pounds, or 20 to The first thing done at the shop of Sneden & Rewland, the contractors, is to lay the sheets out perfectly square, and make the edges fair and smooth. Going then to the punching machine, each sheet is punched near the edges with 200 holes, 13-16 of an inch in diameter: The sheets are then put under a drilling machine and each hole is countersunk so that the rivets may be driven flush, and leaving the pipe perfectly smooth on the inside. Indeed, it is affirmed that it will be very difficult to distinguish them. Next the sheets are sent to the rolling machine, and rolled to the required curve or radius, three sheets butted together forming the pipe. In order to make this butt joint, a strap of iron nine inches wide and half an inch thick is employed, which runs the whole length of all the seams. These straps are made of flange iron, which is required to and Organs, stand a strain 52 per cent, greater than that used for the sheets. The new main will be placed a couple of feet above the two pipes now in use, and new pipe will conduct a volume of water about three and one fourth times greater than the two old pipes together, which, if we recelleer rightly, discharge, 40, 000,000 gallons daily. The new pipe will rest on about 170 cast-iron standards, or saddles, which are placed eight feet apart, and weigh about 1,000 pounds each. It will be protected inwardly and outwardly by coatings of Prince's metal-
